It is appropriate to begin with some religious functions before discussing social, psychological, and expressive functions. Four important religious functions are (1) hierophanic (to reveal something holy or sacred); (2) numinous (to elicit and reinforce a sense of awe and finitude with respect to the divine); (3) ritualistic (to give a narrative explaining and justifying ritual actions); and (4) cosmological (to render a picture of the order of the universe). If you think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can read think again about the Enuma elish and the story of Moses, I think you can
